ANALDO ENERGIA PUBLISHES ITS FIRST SUSTAINABILITY REPORT

The document outlines the company's strategies for the ecological transition, including differentiation of its lines of business and energy sustainability

Ansaldo Energia is publishing its first sustainability report, a document demonstrating its commitment to the environment to all its stakeholders, the community, and the general public.

During the current delicate phase of recovery of the economy following the pandemic, at a time of energy transition and green change, the report is intended to certify Ansaldo Energia's focus on making its business more sustainable.

The report includes important statistics demonstrating commitment to the environment, such as a significant reduction in greenhouse gas emissions (-280.6 tCO₂e of direct greenhouse gas emissions and -1,563.8 of induced emissions), a decrease in water consumption (-20.2%) and production of special wastes (-10.5% per hour worked) compared to the previous year.

In 2020 Ansaldo Energia became the first Italian company in the industry to obtain Biosafety Trust Certification, a new form of certification of best practices minimising the risk of spreading epidemics, in addition to ISO 14001 (environmental management), ISO 45001 (safety management), ISO9001 (quality management) and ISO 37001 (anti-corruption) certification.

"The extraordinary nature of the year 2020 led us to take a closer look at our own processes and actions and our relationship with our stakeholders. This reflection, in addition to world-wide demand for attention to sustainability issues, led to the decision to create and certify our first sustainability report, and we are very
